Important Information for Parents of a Child with Learning Challenges

Individualized Education Plans (IEP) and 504 Plans

Each plan offers formal help for K–12 students with a disability or learning and attention issues. They're similar in some ways but quite different in others. Knowing which laws do what is a big part of understanding the difference and ensuring your child's academic success.

- Define New York State and Federal classification for IEP
- What each document should look like
- Define when a 504 plan is most appropriate
- Comparison of each plan
